

Smartphones Become Easier to Use, Less Complicated for the Elderly and Physically Challenged

San Diego, CA, October 17, 2016 --(PR.com)-- Chatstasy, LLC announces vision and first product release. The company will focus on smartphone applications that make life easier and more simple for the elderly and physically challenged individuals who find Smartphones too complicated and frustrating to use.

Responding to frequently heard complaints from the above groups - that a smartphone is not easy to use - the company has released its first version of a truly unique solution for this long standing problem.

Currently many elderly and physically challenged people resist purchasing a smartphone because of the high intimidation factor and the complexities of using it. Instead, they tend to continue using their old flip phone or multimedia phone, avoiding the smartphone with a passion. This situation creates a twofold problem. First, the elderly and those physical challenged are frustrated and embarrassed when trying to use the newer technology. Second, the mobile device companies and carriers do not want to continue supporting older technology phones. The Chatstasy app closes that gap and benefits both parties.

Chatstasy is unlike any other app. Aimed at making it simple and easy to use a Smartphone, the app offers a robust set of unique, patent-pending features. Navigation and use becomes less complicated resulting in a far less frustrating user experience.

“In fact, our app may even save someone's life,” said founder and CEO, Ram Seshan. For example, by opening the app, users will always have available a red emergency button on the screen to call an ambulance across the world or make an emergency call to loved ones. According to Seshan, “Our products will always be available on both Apple and Android phones in both a free and paid version. We did it right, this extraordinary app, release 1, is backed by over 100 early adopters who contributed valuable user feedback during our development phase. You will be excited when you see it. As a one-time introductory promotion, the premium version of the app can be downloaded free for the next 30 days with the promo code 'chat-sta-sy'.”
